

229.22

Blue Blood by Julia

Long ago I went to Bathgate hills with my friends. The crackling fireplace, the beautiful stars and my friends of course it was great well that's what I thought at the time. Jack and his sister, Jess were stargazing while I was petting the cat.

Suddenly the wind blew faster, the fire had blown out and a strange glow from behind the hills appeared. As quick as a sudden we stood to examine the strange glow, that was slowly getting bigger. I thought it was a celebration but I was proven wrong when a scary silhouette with a big sharp knife stepped out of the bright blue mist.

Running from danger is common sense. Well Jack and Jess ran towards it! A shiver ran down my spine, they had ran right into it. It was just me and Isabelle. Not knowing what to do we stood there horrified. Then out of nowhere something or someone grabbed us from behind, it all went black.

We woke up inside what looked like a bunker. We slowly left the room, worried about what would happen next. Then we agreed that first we need to find Jack and Jess. While walking down the corridor we knew that something bad happened, we could feel it. Before long we found Jack unconscious surrounded by blue blood. I had never seen blue blood before but that wasn't my priority. I lifted Jack and carried him on my back. Soon we saw its eyes as bright as light itself but it had something in its hand.

It was Jess's head! She had been killed by that terrifying thing. We ran away, eventually found an exit and ran home. A strange feeling followed, like we had been cursed. Ever since it's been quite strange, something new... as any time I hurt myself my blood was blue.